

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The present volume is an elaborate version of the report that I prepared within a regional project initiated by the Open Society Institute (Budapest), titled “Monitoring and Combating Extremism in Central and Eastern Europe”. The project was coordinated by Nils Muiznieks, Director of the Latvian Center for Human Rights and Ethnic Studies.

The version that was submitted for publication benefited from the comments made by Renate Weber. Preparation of the volume was done with professionalism and a lot of enthusiasm by Lucian Nastasă. The major references in the field of extremism in Romania were the works of Michael Shafir and William Totok.

I am grateful to Cas Mudde, co-chair of the European Consortium for Political Research Standing group on Extremism and Democracy (University of Edinburgh), with whom I discussed the national reports. His dedication to the liberal approach of extremism reassured me of my own attitude.
